www.eastlothiancourier.com

East Lothian Courier, 10th December, 2010

Prestonpans' rich tapestry loses some colour as Baron says bye

The former Baron of Prestoungrange in his baronia robes

by Sam Berkeley

HE HAS been a central figure in the transformation of Prestonpans from a town struggling to cope with the loss of its mining industry to a regional centre for history and the arts.

But Dr Gordon Prestoungrange remains modest about his own importance in all that has gone on in the town since he first pitched up and bought the title of the Baron of Prestoungrange in 1997.

Thirteen years on, aged 73, he has now retired and relinquished the title – which now carries little in the way of formal powers but can as he's shown be a great force for good - to son Matthew.

Once the snow clears Gordon will be heading home to Northampton for good – though hopes to get the odd 'invite' to return now and again to catch up with dear friends.

Prestonpans was a fantastic town with in incredible history before I got here," said Gordon

"I arrived at a particular moment in time which turned out to be a fascinating moment to be here. I happened to be here at an exciting time when folk happened to be willing to do something.

'There's been things happening all arts to do it.

"I'm not an artist, I'm a writer we've defined art as anything that isn't science ' has turned his energies to in Prestonpans.

From murals and totem poles around the town we?" and playing a major self. Tapestry, Having murals don mother grew successes.

quiring a barony

tions with the area. It didn't take long for Gordon to embark been 'punished'. It didn't have a on his arts mission in the town. On a visit Christmas tree either because some to Prestongrange Mining Museum, his tour kids had sawn it down years ago! guide Jane Bonnar "burst out laughing" But today, we've got three totem when hearing he was the area's baron.

she were baron, she responded she would inves- - all because we got the grass cut."

• Well-known archaeologist Dr Tony Pollard, pictured next to Gordon and the Battle of Prestonpans 'bat- strong leadership through others involved, Gordon tle bus', shows off some of the real-life battle items found from various digs of the battle site

tigate the history of the town.

the way along Prestonpans and it's not tory buffs he helped produce a book detailing the ning an award for the best pub restoration in the just been me doing it but if I've left a town's history - though it struggled for success. UK legacy it's been suggesting using the But a chance visit to the small Canadian town of Chemainus was to change all that.

"We'd produced this lovely book and virtually it," Gordon explained. who's written over 30 books, but no-one was using it," Gordon explained.

And since arriving in the see A Midsummer Night's Dream on Midsummer's Not only did Gordon bring the pub back to how county as Gordon Wills, he Eve and my sister said it was on in Chemainus.

countless projects to further of 15,000 people attracts 400,000 people a year. an arts and crafts hub. the arts and history scenes That's because they hadn't written their history, they'd painted it in murals.

to regenerating The And that philosophy has underpinned many of try, which was unveiled in July. Gothenburg pub, cre- go-getter Gordon's projects in the town. Never one Gordon explained that the idea for the tapestry a suburb of Edinburgh," he said. "To become ating the Prestoung- to sit idly by and wait for others to do something, he came about through a visit to Bayeux, the French a suburb is a terrible thing unless you have range Arts Festival has always been prepared to get things done him- town which is the site of the world-famous Bayeux some unique identity, such as Notting Hill in part in the Battle Despite twice being refused planning permission of Prestonpans for murals "simply because they didn't think it was On realising that the story was similar to that of he a good idea", he got round the problem because as his hero Bonnie Prince Charlie's, Gordon came up Community Council, said of Gordon: "He's has been a busy baron he owned the foreshore opposite The Goth with the idea for a battle tapestry and set about re- been a great guy for the 'Pans'. He's really pub and was able to use the sea walls to paint the cruiting stitchers.

"People didn't object to them and it really dawned he explained. grown up in "People didn't object to them and it really dawned London, Gor- on us that by painting history people become proud always of it," he said.

wanted to return The murals opened a treasure trove of possibili- wanted to do something for Scotland. to the county ties for Gordon; and he was more than willing to where his Mus- explore them. Of all the many projects he has spearselburgh-born headed over the years, he singles out two particular

And when he ting the grass cut at Cuthill Park and restoring decided that ac- The Goth," Gordon said.

"The grass in that park had been allowed could be "a bit of to grow and had been left because some fun" he plumped young lads had gone there and knocked for Prestoungrange golf balls around and one of them had because of his family connec- hit a double-decker bus. "Because of that the town had poles up there, there are annual Bat-When Gordon asked her what she would do if the of Prestonpans re-enactments

Meanwhile, Gordon turned The Goth into a pub off your star striker the balance of the whole team is This he duly did and together with other local his- which the community could be proud of again, win- upset," he explained.

they had and they said it was because we didn't alter the team and not one guy banging in the goals."

"Everybody who takes over a pub tries to mod-"But what happened next was we were in Canada ernise it but we brought back to the community on Vancouver Island. My wife's always wanted to something which everyone remembered."

it was in its prime, he also started its Fowler's mi- he's invested a lot of money. "So off we went and it turns out this sawmill town cro-brewery and turned the pub into something of Those were far from his only successes. He also tion.

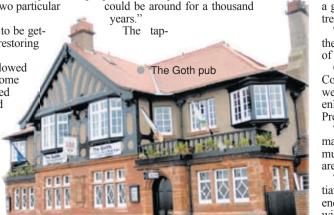

brought the Chemainus-style totem poles to the "I thought to myself, if they can do it why can't town - all the way from the west coast of Canada home for more than a decade, Gordon be-- and had the idea for a Battle of Prestonpans Tapes- lieves Prestonpans is a town on the up.

Tapestry, which depicts the story of William the London. But I don't think Prestonpans is in "Amazingly we managed to find 200 stitchers,"

"When we recruited one they had 10 friends who tion and he's done so much for Prestonpans wanted to do it too and so on. A lot of people just in the arts scene."

"Also at the mention of Bayeux it made people think this piece of their work could be around for a thousand estry is also significant for Gordon as it is the first of is projects to involve the whole of Scotland – and he hopes that can help realise his ultimate aim of a Battle of Prestonpans history centre, for which MSPs are being petitioned for money.

"Almost by accident we have created a product in the tapestry to bring people to a living history centre who wouldn't have been expected to come," Gordon explained.

During his time in Prestonpans, Gordon has invested about £1 million, about half on The Goth and half on his other projects. But he will not be there to oversee the future of his various projects

He has gradually stepped down from his various oles, with tapestry artist Andrew Crummy now chair of the Prestoungrange Arts Festival, and Gareth Jones chairman of the Battle of Prestonpans Heritage Trust

Gordon will be selling his house in Prestonpans and moving to Northampton full-time, to be closer to his family. And it is not unfair to say that the new Baron won't be devoting quite so much of his time to Scotland as his dad did says the time is right to call it a day.

"I flatter myself to think that the balance of the team changes when I go but I've spent a long time "I asked the guys who gave us the award why over the last five years making sure that it's about Mr Crummy told the Courier that Gordon, publisher of Burke's Peerage, would be greatly missed. "I think he's played a very important role in the last 10 years" he said "He's tried to encourage new things to start and "It's not all about Gordon, though; it's about a lot of people. But he's been an inspira-As for the future of the town he has called

"My only concern is that it doesn't become danger of not having an identity.'

lot of good things here

"I can think of nobody quite like him in of 'let's get on and do it'."

Prestonpans.

area's rich history. "His support of various successful arts initiatives, such as the 3 Harbours Festival, has encouraged whole community involvement. I wish Gordon all good wishes in his retirement.

• ONE that got away. . . the Baron and the Prestonpans art community failed to stop the former Coeval building on Preston pans High Street from being bulldozed. They had wanted to turn it into a arts hub for the town

With his projects enjoying such success and

"If you're running a football team and you sell

Jimmy Yule, chairman of Prestonpans put his money where his mouth is and done a

"He pointed everybody in the right direc-

Councillor Peter MacKenzie, who played a significant role in the formation of the Battle of Prestonpan Heritage Trust, said: "It will be a great loss to the area because Gordon has the whole of Scotland who has such a sense

Councillor Ruth Currie, East Lothian Council's cabinet member for community wellbeing, added: "Dr Prestoungrange has enlightened an enthusiasm for the arts in

"He's developed work which has brought many people together to create art, drama, music and a re-emergence of interest in the

Artist Andrew Crummy, Euro MP Alyn Smith, the Baron, and East Lothian Council leader Paul McLennan with sections of the Prestonpans Tapestry

Gordon reads from his book, A Baron's Tale, while (right) Bonnie Prince Charlie (Arran Johnston) gets to grips with the Government forces during a re-enactment of the Battle of Prestonpans. Gordon was, until recently, chairman of the Battle of Prestonpans Heritage Trust.